INTRODUCTION.

THOSE who have studied English Composition, with a view to acquire Simplicity of Style, have generally found that the Etymons of English Particles were not traced, nor their signification explained, in any easily accessible work.

To supply this defect by investigating the Etymology, explaining the Signification, and exemplifying the use of these Particles in the writings of our earlier authors, is one of the objects of this Tract.

In this part of the work much light has been derived from that ingenious Philologist, Horne Tooke; but many words are here added which he has not noticed, and explanations offered, differing from those which he has given, when it appeared that his opinion was not supported by sufficient reasons.

Thus there seems good reason to infer that he is mistaken in the derivation of the words "odd," "down," "forth," etc., etc., in his account of the derivative or future infinitive terminating in nne, and always preceded by to; and some substantives in th.

His views of abstraction are generally, but not always either elear or just. When he says "strictly speaking there is nothing arbitrary in language," he expresses what is truly philosophical, for he evidently admits that "we are struck with a similarity in certain respects" before "we invent a common appellative to express the objects that agree in exciting the same relative feeling;" but this admission, like expressions on the same subject that are found in several philosophical writings, "arises," as an able Metaphysician observes, "from the inconsistency of error, and not from the writers having arrived at the truth."-For how can it be reconciled with such expressions as these? "The business of the mind, as far as it concerns language, extends no farther than to receive impressions, that is, to have sensations or feelings." "What are called the operations of the mind, are merely the operations of language." "Language is the instrument of thought." If we expel from the mind what Bacon terms Idola Fori, ("Idols of the market-place," that is, "preindices arising from mere words and terms in our common intercourse with mankind,") we shall find that all abstract truth ultimately rests upon,-lst, "A perception or conception of two or more objects,"-2dly, "A feeling of their similarity in certain respects," and 3dly, The invention of a common appellative, to express the objects that agree in exciting the same relative feeling."

Besides, Tooke sometimes slides into fallacy, by not distinguishing the Etymological from the customary meaning of words, or in not regarding some words in their Syntactical, but in their original character; and in so far as his work is to be considered as containing a philosophical argument upon abstract notions, the force of it, as has been observed, depends upon Hobbes's premises.—"Truth consisteth in the right ordering of names in our affirmations." "Words give to our conclusions all their generality." It is certain that, without general terms, reasoning must be imperfect; but the very invention of language, and still more the conduct of the uninstructed deaf and dumb, sufficiently prove that man can reason without language of any kind.

The ingenious and learned Tyrwhitt seems to be in error when he says that the termination in ING superseded the Participle in ENDE, for the verbal substantive in ING, existed before the Norman conquest; and it appears that this verbal substantive in 1NG, with the definite article—the—before it, has not, as Lind-Iey Murray imagines, become a Substantive, but that the Substantive is used as a Present Participle; and that our ancient Participle in ENDE, has been displaced and superseded by the Verbal Substantives in 1NG. All speculations founded on the supposed derivation of verbals in 1NG from the Present Participles resemble (as the ingenious Richard Taylor, Editor of a new Edition of the Diversions of Purley, observes,) historical disquisitions in which, facts and dates not being considered of any importance, it should be ingeniously argued a priori that Hengist and Horsa were sons of Queen Anne and William the Conqueror.

Another object contemplated in this Tract is to induce the Student by a careful Examination of the Saxon Derivatives, and the style of Chaucer, Douglas, and Spenser, to trace the Origin, History, and Progress of the Language; and hence to acquire an accurate notion of the meaning, and the proper employment of the words which compose it.

And, in order to carry on and complete our ultimate object, an English Grammar, containing various examples of the violation of Purity and Perspicuity, will soon be published. In English there are upon Grammatical principles only one Voice, one Mood, and two Tenses. "The Grammar of a language is one thing, its capacity of expression is another:"

And if the public should approve this attempt to facilitate and promote the study of English Literature, a series of small tracts will follow, comprising an analysis of the constituents, and an exemplification of the employment of various styles, from the days of Spenser till our own times. The plan sometimes recommended even to persons more advanced, of studying the English Language detached and distinguished from the study of English Literature, is not only futile but absurd; for it is obviously an error to imagine that Grammatical information can be attained by a mere mechanical process only—by the exertion of the memory, apart from the exercise of other powers of the mind. In the opinion of the celebrated author of the Philosophy of Rhetoric, -- "Grammar in its general principle, has a close connexion with the understanding."

The study of the Saxon part of the English Language has been recommended by the most eminent Literary men, yet many persons seem reluctant to undergo the labour of acquiring a correct knowledge of the structure of this important part of the Language.

The neglect of this only proper mode of studying the English Language and Literature by some who have undertaken to teach them in distinguished situations, may require that the disapprobation here expressed should be supported by the authority of very eminent authors.

Swift, a writer of pure English, preferred thrill from the Saxon verb thrillian, to penetrate from the Latin verb penetrare.

Doctor Whately, Archbishop of Dublin, and a distinguished Philosophical writer, thus expresses the same opinion:—"To those who wish to be understood, and to write with energy, one of the best principles of selection, is generally to prefer terms of Saxon origin."

The late Robert Hall, whose style combines the energy of Johnson, with the simplicity and the elegance of Addison, erased the word penetrate, and substituted pierce from the Saxon verb percian.

After, says Dr. Gregory, Robert Hall had written down the striking apostrophe which occurs in his celebrated sermon on Infidelity, at about page 76 of most of the editions—"Eternal God on what are thine enemies intent! what are those enterprises of guilt and horror, that, for the safety of their performers, require to be enveloped in a darkness which the eye of Heaven must not penetrate!" he asked "Did I say penetrate, Sir, when I preached it?" "Yes." "Do you think, Sir, I may venture to alter it? for no man who considered the force of the English language, would use a word of three syllables there, but from absolute necessity." "You are, doubtless, at liberty to alter it, if you will." "Then be so good, Sir, to take your peneil, and for penetrate put pierce; pierce is the word, Sir, and the only word to be used there." I have now the evidence of this before me, in the entire manuscript, which I carefully preserve among my richest literary treasures.

The acute and energetic author, Dr. Crombie, who "has done more to simplify the structure of the English Language than any writer living or dead," thus expresses himself: "Of all languages to which the attention of the student can be directed, that is first entitled to consideration which will be called into most frequent exercise in active life; and of his proficiency, in which almost every individual, with whom he may in future chance to be associated, will be competent to form an opinion."

"It is an egregious error to imagine, that a perfect knowledge of Greek and Latin precludes the necessity of studying the principles of English Grammar. The structure of the ancient and that of the modern languages are very dissimilar. Nay the peculiar idioms of any language, how like soever in its general principles to any other, must be learned by study, and an attentive perusal of the best writers in that language. Nor can any imputation be more reproachful to the proficient in Classical Literature, than with a critical knowledge of Greek and Latin, which are now dead languages, to be superficially acquainted with his native tongue, in which he must think, and speak, and write."

And in the words of him, "who has gone on with a series of intellectual achievements so brilliant and so rapid, that there is no contemporary analogy to be found for them except in the military conquests of him who sleeps at St. Helena":—

"The English writers who really unlock the rich sources of the language, are those—who used a good Saxon dialect with ease, correctness, and perspicuity,—learned in the ancient classics, but only enriching their mother tongue, where the Attic could supply its defects,"———. "Those great wits had no fore-knowledge of such times as succeeded their brilliant age, when styles should arise,————, with a needless profusion of ancient words and flexions, to displace those of our own Saxon, instead of temperately supplying its defects. Least of all could those lights of English eloquence have imagined that men should appear amongst us professing to teach composition, and ignorant of the whole of its rules, and incapable of relishing the beauties, or indeed apprehending the very genius of the language, should treat its peculiar terms of expression and flexion, as so many inaccuracies, and practise their pupils in correcting the faulty English of Addison, and training down to the mechanical rhythm of Johnson, the lively and inimitable measures of Bolingbroke."

2, Lufion hi,	amanto,	Let them love.

PRESENT PARTICIPLE.

Lufiand, end, etc.	amans,	Loving.
Loving is sometimes	improperly termed	Active.

English Grammar.

This Participle, dropping e final, forms a Noun Substantive. Thus freende, freend, friand, a friend.

Sax. Der., page 21, etc.

It sometimes acquires the power of a Gerund, as Rædende ic tace, By reading I teach: and is sometimes used for the Passive and Future Participles, as Thisum worde yehyrende, um, This word being heard.

OPTATIVE MOOD.

Present Tense.

Eala gif ic nu lufiye, (utinam) nunc amem, oh, that I now loved, etc.

Past Tense.

Eala gif ic nu lufode, (utinam) nune amavissem, oh, that I had now loved, etc.

Future Tense.

Eala gif ic lufiye gyt, (utinam) demum amem, oh, that I may yet love.

ELLIPTICAL FORM OF THE VERB.—(SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.)

English Grammar.

This form of the Verb is, in all Tenses, similar to that of the Optatives,—only the prefixes Eala gif are changed into Thonne, as Thonne ie un lufiye, cum nune amem, since or when I now love.

POTENTIAL MOOD.

The Potential Mood—(pure) expresses the possibility of a thing without an auxiliary Verb, as Thaet ic cume, that I may come:—(circumscribed) by the use of mayan, willan, secalan, may or mot, etc. Thus,

Present Tense.

Ic may, or mot lufian, amer, I may, or am allowed to love. Grammatically speaking, there is not in Anglo-Saxon or in English, either a Subjunctive or a Potential Mood.

English Grammar.

VERBS PASSIVE.

The Passive Verb is formed by the Auxiliary been, and the Participle of the Past Tense.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

Present Tense.

Ic eom Infod, amor, I am loved, etc.

Past Tense.

Ic was lufod, amabar, I was loved, etc.

Future Tense.

Wa, alas; wel, well; cala gif, O that, etc.

Sax. Der., page 58.

SYNTAX.

I. The cause is put either in the Genitive, the Accusative, or the Ablative case, as Godes tudres yesælig, "happy because of a good offspring;" Mærthum yefræye, "celebrated because of his Majesty."

II. The Ablative is often used absolutely, as Him forlætenum, they being left.

III. A Noun of multitude is often joined to a Verb or Adjective plural, as That folc was yearbidiyende and wundrodon, the people were waiting and wondered.

IV. A Neuter Adjective, used absolutely, requires a Genitive case, as Eal sinces, some (something of) treasure.

V. Adjectives signifying plenty, want, likeness, dignity, and the nonn Wana, govern a Genitive and sometimes an Ablative, as Full halgum Gaste, full of the Holy Ghost.

VI. Comparatives are followed by the, thonne, than, or by a Genitive, as Hysmara, greater than that; or by an Ablative, as Mare callum onsægdnyssum, more than many sacrifices.

VII. Superlatives require a Genitive, as Ealra wyrta mæst, the greatest of all herbs.

VIII. The Verb Substantive requires a Genitive case, as Thathing the synd Godes, the things which are God's. Verbs of desiring, remembering, enjoying, fearing, expecting, ceasing, generally admit a Genitive case; onfengan, ondredan admit an Accusative. Verbs of accusing and depriving require a Genitive of the thing, as Berefian doltra, bearna, to bereave of daughters; sometimes a Dative or Ablative, as That he us at urum asson bereafive, that he may deprive us of our asses.

IX. The Infinitive has an Accusative before it, as ye yeseoth me habban, you see me to (or that 1) have.

X. Verbs of asking and teaching require two Accusatives—one of the person, and another of the thing, as Hine axodon that bigspel, they asked him that parable.

XI. The Reciprocal Verb is often used, as Ondræd the thinne

God, fear thee thy God.

XII. Some Impersonal Verbs require an Accusative of the person, and a Dative of the thing, as Thone welegan lyst anwealdes, it desires a rich man of power,—a rich man desires power; some take a Dative of the person, and a Genitive of the thing, as Him was ne seeamode, to them of this there was no shame,—they were not ashamed of this. Yebyrath has a double Dative, as Him ne yebyrath to tham sceapum, to him there was no care to the sheep,—he cared not for the sheep.

It is recommended to the Student to parse all the Anglo-Saxon words thus: (See Lord's Prayer.) Fæder, a noun, substantive of the first Declension—in the singular number a monoptote, but in the plural declined (See Smithas page.) N. Fæderas, G. fædera, D. fæderum, Ac. fæderas, v. Eala ye fæderas, Ab. fæderum—ure, is an adjective of one termination—ure, M. N.—ure, F.—masculine gender, singular number; and vocative case to agree with its substantive fæder—(See ure, page 11.) See verse 12,—hyne underfengon—hyne is the primitive pronoun of the third person, masculine gender, and accusative case; after the verb underfengon—See Syntax—Rule VIII.

ASSERTION.

The striking analogies between the Celtic dialects, and the languages which are most generally allowed to be of cognate origin with the Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin, afford ample proofs of the common origin of all these languages, and of the Eastern origin of the Celtic Nations.

PROOFS.

1. The verb substantive in Sanskrit is analogous to that in the other languages generally allowed to be allied to it, and the Celtic inflections partake in the same general analogies.

In Latin insert er, before the prominal suffix, -o, rexi, rex-er-o. In Greek olo, ol-es-o. In Sanskrit sya or ishya yachami, Yach-[i-sya or shya-mi.

Hence it has been inferred, that many modifications (such as amay-eram for fueram) of attributive verbs are derived from a composition of a verbal root with the tenses of the verb substantive.—See Grammatica Critica Lingua Sanskitika, by Professor

The second future in Greek, and the most simple form of the future tense in Latin are slight inflections of the present.

In Greek-lego, lego. In Latin-lego, am.

To suppose that this second future is merely a first future in a different form, would be contrary to the analogy of the cognate languages.

This future recalls those languages in which the present tense is used for a future. Thus the British future creday.

VII. The preterperfect seems to have been formed originally on the same principle in the Greek, Latin, Sanskrit, and Teutonic languages.

The dialects of the Celtic nations are connected therefore with the Sanskrit, Greek, Latin, and Tentonic languages, by a considerable number of roots, or primitive words, and also by analogy in grammatical forms. Hence all these languages are Cognate, and hence the Eastern origin of the Celtic nations is inferred.

In some of the languages of western Europe, gutteral, or hard palatine consonants abound, and take the place of the sibilants, soft palatines, and dentals, and even of the labial consonants, which are found in the more eastern languages.

SAXON DERIVATIVES;

WITH

οF

Douglas, Chaucer, & Spenser.

'In English, and in all Languages, there are only two sorts of words which are necessary for the communication of our thoughts.

- 1. Noun, and
- 2. Verb.

'All the others (which are not necessary to speech, but merely substitutes) are abbreviations.'

'It must be observed that the apparently different application constitutes the only difference between the Parts of Speech.'

'Conjunctions have signification per se.'

If is the Imperative of the Saxon Verb gifan, to give or grant. Chaucer commonly uses if, but sometimes yewe, yef and yf for gif. G. Douglas almost always uses gif, only once or twice he has used if; once he uses gewe, and once giffis, and sometimes in case and in cais, for if.

"Gif luf be verteu, than is it leful thing;"

"Gif it be vice, it is gour undoing."

DOUGLAS.

Gif luf—that is, Grant that love, &c.

Gour—Your.—G is in many instances changed into y.

'She was so charytable and so pitous,

She wolde wepe YF that she sawe a mous

Caught in a trappe, if it were deed or bledde.'

PROL. TO CANTERBURY TALES.

So here the letters selid of this thing,
That I mote beare in all the haste I may
Yewe ye woll ought unto your sonne the Kyng,
I am your servaunt bothe nyght and day.

CHAUCER.

In Chaucer, and in other old writers, the verb to give suffers the same variations in the manner of writing and pronouncing it, whether used conjunctively or otherwise, as does also the none derived from it.

' Forgiff me, Virgill, gif I thee offend.'

Douglas.

4 Yeoven under our signet.

LODGE'S ILLUSTRATIONS.

GIN, the participle given, gi'en, gi'n, was often used for if or an.

O Gin her face was wan!

'If my daughter there should have done so, I wou'd not have gi'n her a groat.'

WIGHERLY.

An is the imperative of the Verb anan, to give, or grant. It often supplies the place of if.

'An't please you,' that is, an it, or if it please.

As, meaning the same as it, that or which, is compounded of al and es or as. It was formerly written als.

DOUGLAS.

AL, which in comparisons used to be very properly employed before the first es or as, but not before the second, we now suppress.

As swift as. Not AL as swift as, &c.

So is sa, or so, a Gothic article of the same import.

That is the past Participle that or theat of the Saxon.

THAT is the past Participle that or theat of the Saxon Verb thean, to assume. It is evidently, in all cases, an adjective.

'I wish you to believe that I would not wilfully hurt a fly.'
RESOLUTION.

I would not wilfully hurt a fly; I wish you to believe that (assertion).

Unless is the imperative, onles, of onlesan, dimittere, to dismiss.

In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, this conjunction was sometimes written oneles and onelesse. Thus, in the trial of Sir John Old Castle, Au. 1413. 'It was not possible for them to make who!e Christes cote without seme—onelesse certain great men were brought out of the way,' that is—dismiss certain great men, &c.

.It is said that William Tyndall, our immortal translator of the Bible, was one of the first who wrote this word with a u-

"The scripture was given, that we may applye the medicine of the scripture, every man to his own sores, unlesse then we entend to be idle disputers and branlers about vaine wordes, &c.

Prol.——— 'What's the matter, That you unlace your reputation thus, And spend your rich opinion for the name Of a night brawler?'

Unlace, in this passage, means-" you unless, or onles your reputation"—that is, dismiss or lose your reputation.

It does not appear that onless was employed conjunctively by the Anglo-Saxon writers, as we use unless, except in discourse; but instead of it, they frequently employed nymthe, or memthe, the imperative nym or nem, of nyman or neman, to which is subjoined the, namely, that Nymthe—take away that, may very well supply the place of—onless (the expressed or understood)—Dismiss that

LES the imperative of LESAN, which has the same meaning as ONLESAN, is used sometimes by old writers instead of unless.

Gif he

Commytis any treassoun, suld he not de, LES than his prince of grete humanite Perdoun his falt for his long trew service.

G. Douglas.

This same imperative Les, placed at the end of nouns, has given to our language such adjectives as hopeless, (dismiss hope,) restless; the privative termination less, as breathless; and the comparative less. The superlative Least, is the pastparticiple of Lesan. Least is contracted for lesed.

In every instance of the use of Less or Least to be found in the language, the signification of Dismissing, Separating, or Taking-away, is conveyed.

The reader will see at once the force of this adjective as used by our ancestors, when, instead of nineteen and eighteen, they said, An laes twentig—Twa laes twentig; that is, Twenty, Dismiss (or take away) one. We also say,—He demanded twenty; I gave him two Less, that is, Dismiss two.

'Thrice have I sent him (says Glendower) weather-beaten home, and bootless back.' 'Home without boots (replies Hotspur) and in foul weather too.'

We sometimes supply the place of UNLESS in English, either by but, or without, or be it not, or but if, &c.

"That never was there garden of such pryse, But yf it were the very paradyse."

FRANKELEYNS TALE.

OR is a contraction for OTHER, alius or alter, and denotes diversity, either of name or of subject.

YET is the imperative, get, of GETAN, obtinere, to obtain, and STILL of STELLAN, ponere, to place, to suppose. Yet and still were often used mutually for each other, without any alteration in the meaning of the sentences.

'For albeit tarieng be noyful, ALGATE it is not to be reproved in yeuynge of jugement, ne in vengeaunce takeyng.'

To get is sometimes spelt by Chaucer GEATE.

STILL.

Though this verb is no longer current in English, except as a conjunction, yet it keeps its ground in the collateral languages.

THAN is supposed to be a compound of the definitive THA, and the additive termination en, thus THA en, thanne, then, and now spelled THAN.

Else is the imperative, ales, of the verb alesan, dimittere, to dismiss. It was formerly written alles, alys, alyse, elles, ellus, ellis, elles, els.

'Withouten noyse or clattering of belles, Te Deum was our songe and nothing ELLES.'

'Him behoveth serve himselfe that is no swayn, Or ELS he is a fole, as clerkes sayn.'

CHAUCER.

ELSE

S. Johnson says—'Else, Pronoun, other, one besides. It is applied both to persons and things.'

He says again—'Else, Adverb—1. otherwise; 2. besides, except that mentioned.'

Else may be resolved into hoc dimisso, this being dismissed, dismiss this. Thus, 'you have shewn impotence and malice enough;' What else have you shewn?'—Dismiss them, what have you shown.

THOUGH is the imperative, thaf, of the verb THAFIGAN, or THAFIAN, to allow, permit, grant, yield, assent. By a transition, THAF became thagh, though, thouh, and thoch.

F was dropped from the pronunciation about the time of Henry 11.

Instead of though and although, our ancient writers often used all be, all be it, all had, all should, all were, all give, how be it, set, suppose, &c.

'I feel exceedingly for Mr. M., SUPPOSE I have not the honour of being personally acquainted with him.'

'For I wol speke, and tel it the, AL SHULDE I dye.'

CHAUCER

Though is velgarly used, not only at the beginning, and between, but at the end of sentences.

'And may again, but his clothes shall never be the best thing about him, though.'

IF & THOUGH

may very frequently supply each other's place, as—'Though an host of men rise up against me, yet shall not my heart be afraid;' or ! If an host of men, &c. &c.'

WITHOUT, WYTHUTAN, the imperative of the verb wyrthanutan, to be out. Any part of this verb was frequently employed instead of the verb to be, in every part of the conjugation.

'He worth upon his stede gray,'—that is, He was—

'But I a draught have of that welle,
In which my dethe is and my lyfe;
My joye is tourned in to strife,
That sobre shall I never WORTHE.'—that is, Never be.

GOWER.

But is the imperative, BE-UTAN, BEON-UTAN, to be out. But corruptly used for bot is from BOTAN, to superadd, to supply, to

'I'll give you five pounds to boot.'

Not, or ne, or nat, used to be inserted before bentan.

'Myn entent is not but to play.'

atone for. To Boot is the infinitive of this verb.

Douglas.

We should now say 'my intent is but to play.' Douglas generally distinguishes but from bot, thus:-

Got thy werke shall endure in lande and glorie, But spot or falt condigne eterne memorie.

Bot sen that virgil standis but compare.'

G. DOUGLAS.

BUT for BOT.

But does not answer to sed in Latin, or Mais in French, except only where it is used for bot. 'But,' but that another divine inspiration moved the beholders to believe that she did therein a noble act, this act of her's might have been calumniated, &c.'

Donne.

In this passage, but is used in both its meanings.

The Dutch still retain Boeten in their language with the same meaning as Botan, to boot.

But (as distinguished from Bot) and without, have both exactly the same meaning—Be-out. They were both originally used indifferently either as Conjunctions or Prepositions.

Hence it is evident that the apparently different application constitutes the only difference between Conjunctions and Prepositions.

And, the imperative AN-ad, from ANAN-ad, dave congeriem, to add.

Two AND (add) two are four.

LEST is the past participle, lesed, of LESAN, dimittere. The imperative LES was sometimes used for lest, as well as for unless.

'I knew it was past four houris of day, And thocht I wald na langare ly in May; Les Phoebus suld me losingere ataynt.'

C. DOUGLAS.

From the same verb we derive to lessen, to lease, to release, to lose, and the noun loss.

The verb to lose was formerly written lese, lois, leis, &c.

'Him needed none helpe, if he ne had no money, that he might LESE.'

LEST.

Lest for Lesed, (as blest for blessed, &c.,) with the article THAT expressed or understood, meant, which being dismissed, dismiss this. 'You make use of such indirect arts as these to blast my reputation, lest peradventure, they might with some indifference hear reason from me.'

CHILLINGWORTH.

Here Lest is used with propriety-

'You make use of these arts':—Why? The reason follows,—'Lesed that'—namely, that being dismissed,—'men might hear reason from me.' Therefore,—you use these arts!

But it is improperly used in the following instance, for lest has no meaning in it, there being nothing dismissed, in consequence of which something else would follow.

Thus King Henry, 'If we suffer the fyrste suggestion unto synne to tarry any while in our hartes, it is great peryel lest that consent and dede wyll followe shortly after.'

Lest, else, and unless, have all three one meaning, and are parts of the same verb Lesan, that is, of on-lesan, a-lesan, Lesan.

Since, the past participle of seon, to see, was formerly written sithen, syne, seand, seeing, sith, seen that, sens, &c. Sithence and sith were in good use, down even to the time of the Stuarts.

Since for seand, seeing that; and for siththe, seen that, is used as a conjunction; but for siththan, thence forward, and for syne, sene, it is used as a preposition.

AS A PREPOSITION.

'Did George the Third reign before or since that example?'

AS A CONJUNCTION.

· If I should labour for any other satisfaction, but that of my own mind, it should be an effect of phrenzy in me, not of hope; since it is not truth, but opinion that can travel the world without a passport.

Either is from the Saxon agilter, uterque, one of the two; and Each from elc, elkeen, each, both taken individually, every one. Thus—

'The General ordered his troops to march on either side.'
'The General ordered his troops to march on each side.'

Many of the conjunctions may be used almost indifferently (or with a very little turn of expression) for each other.

And soft he sighed, lest men might him hear. And soft he sigh'd, that men might not him hear. And soft he sigh'd, else men might him hear. Unless he sighed soft, men might him hear. Without he sighed soft, men might him hear. If that he sighed not soft, men might him hear. And an he sighed not soft, men might hear. Be if he sighed not soft, men might him hear.

PREPOSITIONS.

· Prepositions have signification per se.'

With is the imperative of the verb withan to join. The other parts of the verb have ceased to be employed in the language. We still retain in English the substantives with or withe, withers, and wither-bands

"The only furniture belonging to the houses, appears to be an oblong vessel made of bark, by tying up the ends with a withe."

CAPTAIN COOKS' DESCRIPTION OF BOTANY.

'A house with, that is, join a party wall.'

By and with are always synonymous when with is the imperative of wyrthan, for By is the imperative of beon to be.

Through is from the Gothic noun thuro, a door, gate, or passage. It was formerly thorough, thurough, thorow, through, or thro, thurugh.

"Than eometh ydelnesse, that is the yate of all harmes. The ydlenesse is the thorruke of all wyeked and vylanne thoughtes."

The Anglo-Saxon employs indifferently for Door either Dure or Thure. Distel and Dorn in German are Thistle and Thorn in English.

From is simply the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic Noun frum, from, beginning, origin, source, fountain, author. It is referable to time as well as to motion, because it relates to every thing to beginning, origin, source, fountain, author. It is referable to time as well as to motion, because it relates to every thing to which beginning relates.

"From morn to (or till) night, th' eternal larum rang."
The larum rang beginning morning."

FROM.

'Figs came from Turkey,'
That is,

'Turkey the place of beginning to come.'

The preposition to, opposed to from, is from the Gothic Substantive taui, act, result, effect, consummation.

This substantive is the past participle of the verb, tuan, or tuon—in Saxon teogan, in the Teutonic tuan, agere, to do.

Chaucer sometimes drops the infinitive termination an or en, and uses To, thus-

"My liege, lady: generally quod he, Women desyren to have soveraynte As well over her husbondes as her love."

Sometimes he uses the infinitive termination, thus—

"In al the court was there wife ne mayde,
Ne widow, that contraried that he saide,
But said, he was worthy HAN his lyfe."

Do, or To, means act. To love, that is, act love. Do love, that is, act love. T is changed into D—To or Do.

TILL is compounded of to and while, that is, time.

Some ancient authors use WHILE alone as a preposition, that is, leave out to, and say—I will stay while evening.

"Sygeberte wyth hys two bretherne, gave backe whyle they came to the ryver of Ligoune."

Some philologists are of opinion that for comes from the the Gothic substantive fairina, cause, and of (in the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon af) from a fragment of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon afara, proles, offspring, consequence, follower, successor, &c. &c.

"This dronken myller hath ytolde us here Howe that begyled was a carpentere, Peradventure in skorne for I am one."

CHAUCER.

Whilst the patronimical termination of our northern ancestors was son, the Sclavonic patronymic was of. Thus, whom the English named with propriety Peterson, the Russians called Peterhof. Of was formerly used where we now employ by.

"These quenes were as two goddesses."
But that arte couth thei not fynde,
OF which Uisses was deceived.

GOWER.

By (in the Anglo-Saxon written be, be, big) is the imperative byth of the Anglo-Saxon verb beon, to be. Our ancestors wrote it indifferently either be or bi.

"Damville be right ought to have the leading of the army, but, beyeause thei be cosen germans to the Admirall, thei be mistrusted."-1568.

With, the imperative of Wrythan, was used with propriety for By, the imperative of Beon. "Renwaleus was warred With the King of Britons." It is often confounded with the imperative of withan, to join.

By was formerly used where we now use for, in, during, through. As-

"Sleynge the people without mercy By all the wayes that they passyd."

FABIAN.

Between, is a dual preposition. It is the Anglo Saxon Imperative Be, and Twegen or twain.

The verb 'to twin,' is still used in Scotland for 'to part' or 'separate.'

Betwixt (by Chaucer written bytwyxt) is the imperative Be, and the Gothic Twos or two, and was written in the Anglo Saxon betweels, betweex, betwux, betwyx, and betwyxt.

Beneath is from the same imperative Be, and the noun, NEATH, nadir; nether and nethermost, are corrupted from neothemest, mithaemast.

'Which doctrine also the lordes both spiritual and temporall, with the NETHER house of our parliament, have both sene, and lyke very wel.'

Under or On Neder is from the same word.

'To both the under worlds.'

HUDIBRAS.

Beyond is from Be, and the past participle Geond, of the verb gan gongan, to go, or to pass.

Ward. In the Anglo Saxon ward is the imperative of the verb Wardian, to look at, or to direct the view. It is the same word as the French Garder.

' Take Reward of (pay regard to, or look again at) thyne owne valewe, that thou ne be to foule to thy selfe.'

We know that the same agent is called either a looker, a warden, a warder, an overseer, a keeper, a guard, or a guardian.

The word Ward was with propriety joined to the name of any person, place, or thing, to or from which our view or sight may be directed.

'That eehe of you to shorte with others way In this viage, shall tel tales tway To Canterbury WARDE I mean it so, And Homewards he shall tel tales other two.'

CHAUCER.

Athwart is the past participle of Thweorian, (to wrest, to twist.) Hence we have swerve, veer, and thwart.

Among, formerly written emonge, amonge, amonges, amongest, amongst, among, is from the preterperfect Gemong or gemang,— or gamong, -ang, of mengan, to mix to mingle.

The Saxons were fond of dropping the participal termination od, ad, or ed, or en, and prefixing especially to their past participles A, w, Be, for, or ge.

Chancer uses Amonges as a participle in the following sentence. If then easteth thy seedes in the feldes, then shouldest have in mynde that the yeres bene Amonges, otherwhyle plentuous, and otherwhyle bareyn.

BOECICS.

Ymell is used by Chaucer for among.

' Herdest thou ever slike a song or now?

Lo whilke a complin is YMELL hem alle.

Ymeddled, ymelled, and ymell by the omission of the participial termination mean mixed, mingled.

'He Medleth sorrowe with likynge."

GOWER.

ENDLONG AND ALONGE

Are words often found in our ancient writers. Johnson does not account for the latter. The former answers to Andlang and the latter to Gelang. This means along, laid on, stretched out, that, on long.

' Endlang the styll fludis calme and bene.'

Dougl.s.

'For ever whan I thinke amonge, Howe all is on myself Alonge, I saie, o foole of all fooles.'

GOWER.

The whole verb Dure, from the French participle Durang, was some time used commonly in our language.

"And at his luste, and at his besy cure, Was for to lowe her while his lyfe mai Dure."

CHARGED

Outtake, and Outtaken, the imperative, and the past participle were formerly in very common use.

"But yron was there none ne stele, For all was golde, men myght see, Outtake the fethers and the tre."

ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE.

Nigh, near, next, is the Anglo-Saxon Adjective Nih, neh, neah, neahg, vicinus, near. Next is the Anglo-Saxon Superlative Nehst.

"Forsoth this proverbe it is no lye, Men say thus alway, the Nye slye Maketh the ferre love to be lothe."

CHAUCER.

About is from ONBUTAN (ymbutan,) compounds of butan and the prepositions on or ym-

Butan means to go, and on means in.

Instead is from the Anglo-Saxon, on stede in place.

Our oldest English writers commonly used the Gothic word Steds, or the Anglo-Saxon Stede.

"But ge, unhappy man, fle frae this Stede."

DOLGLAS.

This word is often compounded,—as, Homestead, bed-stead, roadstead, steadfast, steady, stepmother, stepson. Stepmother in the place of, instead of a mother, a father, a brother, &c.

"Divide yourself into two halfs, just by the Girdlestcad; send one half with your friend, and keep the other to yourself."

B. Johnson.

After, the comparative of the noun Aeft, aft, aft, hind, back. In the Anglo-Saxon they use indifferently behindan, beæftan, and onbace.

Down is from of-dune, off or from hill, down hill, proclivis, of-dune, downward, down. Dun means a hill.

Upon, up, over, bove, above, come from ufon, ufan, ufa, top or head.

Ufon, altus, high.

Ufera, altior, higher, over, or upper.

Ufenæst, altissimus, upmost, uppermost, upperest, overest.

Be-ufan or bufan bove.

On-bufan above.

The use of these words in all the northern languages as adjectives, is very common.

"Her OVER ip wyped she so clene, That in her cup was no ferthynge sene."

PRIORESSE.

Uson may easily be derived from heosen, the past participle of heosan, to heave, or lift up.

Our words Head and Heaven are evidently the past participle heofen, heafad, and heafd.

It is not improbable that the etymology of In is Inna, the interior of the body, a cave, a cell, a cavern, and of Out, Ute, outa, skin.

On has been derived from an, upon, and At, from act, at.

It has been observed that the names of all abstract relation (as it is called) are taken either from the adjectived common names of objects, or from the participles of common verbs.

ADVERBS.

'Adverbs are abbreviations or contractions for two or more words, they are employed to denote the attributes only of attributes.'

The termination Ly of adverbs, is only the word Like corrupted. In the German, the Dutch, the Danish, and Swedish, it is written lich, lik, lig, liga. Goodlike is sometimes used for goodly, and gentlemanlike for gentlemanly.

In Scotland for a goodly figure, the common people say a goodlike figure.

Adrift, adrift'd, adrifted, driffed, or driffen, is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb adrifan, to drive.

'And quwhat aventure has the hiddir driffe?'

DOUGLAS.

Go, ago, ygo, gon, agon, gone, agone, are all used indiscriminately by our old English writers as the past participle of the verb to go.

'The daic is go, the nightes chaunce, Hath derked all the bright sonne.'

GOWER.

'Twenty years agone.'

TILLOTSON.

Asunder is the past participle asundrian, of the verb sundrian, to separate, as particles of sand. Sond means sand.

'These ylke two that beth in armes lafte, So loth to hem asonder gon it were.'

TROYLUS.

Astray is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb astragan, spargere, to stray, to scatter.

'This priest was drunke, and goth astrayde.'

GOWER.

'Me lyst not of the chaffe ne of the stree, Make so long a tale, as of the corne.'

From straw, or strah, proceed to stray, to straw, to strew, to straggle, to stroll, straw-berry, (that is, straw'd-bery, stray-berry.)

Lewer, lefe, lewest, luf, lief, leif, liever, lievest, are the past participle of luftan, to love.

'In the swete season that lefe is.'

CHAUCER.

'I had as lief not be-'

Leof the past participle of lufian, to love, means always beloved.

Halt is the past participle of the verb healdan, to halt or hold. Hold was formerly written halt.

Every man, that Halt him worth a leke, Upon his bare knees ought all his lyfe Thankin God, that him hath sent a wyfe.

La, loke loketh, Lo, the imperative of look, were used indifferently by our old English writers.

'Lokketh Athylla the great conquerour, Dyed in his slepe, with shame and dishonour.'

CHATCER.

Foot Hot means immediately, without giving time for the foot to cool.

'And Custaunce han they taken anon Fotchot.'

CHATCER.

Afoot, was formerly written On Fote; aside, on side; ablase, on blase: aboard, on boarde; abroad, on brode; adays, on daies; a night, on night; a fire, on fyre; alive, on live; anew, on new; arow, on raw; asleep, on slepe; aloft, on lyft. Lyft in Anglo-Saxon, is the air or the clouds.

Aghast, agast, was the past participle, agised, agis'd, agist, of Agisan, to make to shudder, to terrify to the degree of trembling.

It is probable that, as whiles, amonges, &c., became whilst, amongst, &c., so agids might become agis'd agist, agast.

From the noun Agis, fear and trembling, we derive Ague, pronounced in some parts by the common people aghy, or aguy.

The distinguishing mark of ague is the trembling or shudder-ing.

Anon in one (understand instant, moment, minute,).

'Than Dame Prudence, without delay or tarieing, sent anone her messenger.'

In the Anglo-Saxon An means one, and On means in. The latter word we have in English corrupted to a before A vowel, and to An before a consonant; and in writing and speaking connected it with the subsequent word. The adverbs which have sprung from this double corruption have no correspondent adverbs in other languages, because there has not been in any other language a similar corruption.

Thus from on daeg, on niht, on lenge, on braede, on baee, on land, on life, on middan, on rihte, on twa, on weg; we have aday, anight, along, abroad, aback, aland, alive, amid, aright, atwo, away; and from on an, anon.

Douglas writes, on ane.

'Thus sayand, selio the bing ascendis on Ane.'

GOWER.

In English or Anglo-Saxon, the past tense is formed by a change of the characteristic letter of the verb.

Wringan, to wring Wrang, wrong, wrung. By the characteristic letter is meant the vowel or dipthong which immediately precedes the infinitive termination, an, can, can, or gan, gean, gian.

From Alfred to Shakspeare, o chiefly prevailed in the South, and a broad in the North. Since that time the fashion of writing (as Tooke expresses it) has decidedly changed to ou and u, and in some instances to oa and oo and ai. Climb, clomb, clamb. Bind, bound, band. Wring, wrong, wrang, wrung.

From Alfred to Shakespeare a great variety of spelling appears, both in the same, and in different writers. Chaucer complains of this.

"And for there is so greate diversyte in Englyshe, and in writynge of our tonge."

"Fashion, unless we watch well, will mislead us widely from the rule of Sentiendum ut sapientes."

CHAUCER.

Dugan, valere, fortis, to be valiant. Doughty dedes—præclara facta, illustrious deeds.

ADJECTIVE.

An Adjective denotes any substance or attribute, not by itself, but as conjoined with a subject, or pertaining to its character.

It is by no means a necessary part of speech, for it is resolvable into the name of the thing implied, and any term of reference or conjunction, as of, with. Thus, "a prudent man," "is equivalent to a man with," or "join prudence," or to "a man of prudence."

'In English, instead of adjectiving our own substantives, we have borrowed, in immense numbers, adjectived signs from other languages; without borrowing the unadjectived signs of those same ideas; because our authors frequently found they had occasion for the former, but not for the latter. And, not understanding the nature of language, or the nature of the very benefit they were receiving; they did not, as they might and should have done, improve their own language by the same contrivance within itself; but borrowed from other languages abbreviations ready made to their hands.'

Thus they have incorporated in the English—for The Substantives The Foreign Adjectives.

Substantives The Foreign Adjectives-Child . Infant, Infantine.

Boy . Puerile.

Man . . Virile, Human, Masculine, Male. Woman . . Female, Feminine, Effiminate.

Birth . Natal, Native.

Life . Vital, Vivacious, Vivid, Amphibious.

Alms . Eleemosynary.

Alms itself became an Adjective by successive corruptions of ELEEMOSYNE, long before its Adjective was required; having successively exhibited itself as Almosine, Almosie, Almose, Almes, and finally Alms.

The adoption of such words as these was indeed a benefit, and an improvement of our language; which, however, would have been more properly obtained by ADJECTIVING our own words. For, as the matter now stands, when a poor Foreigner has learned all the names of things in the English tongue, he must go to other languages for a multitude of the ADJECTIVED names of the SAME THINGS. And even an unlearned native can never understand the meaning of one quarter of that which is called his native tongue.'

We have not in English an instance of the FUTURE TENSE AD-JECTIVE, except the word Future.

About to do, or is to do, is a lame expression for Facturum. Our old translators expressed this Future Abbreviation thus, 'Thou that ART TO COMYNGE.'

The Future Infinitive in Saxon, terminated in nge, was always preceded by To, and it answered to gerunds, supines, and future participles.

'Christ Jhesu that is to DEMYNGE the quyke and deed.'
2J Tim. CAP. 4, VER. 1.

PARTICIPLE.

A Participle is derived from a verb, and agrees with its primitive in denoting action, being, or suffering, but differs from it in this, that the participle implies no affirmation.

The termination ING is from the Anglo-Saxon ande, Aende, Ende, IND, Onde, INDE, YNDE, and corresponds to the termination of the Latin gerunds in andum and endum, expressing continuation, as, Amandum, Lufiande, Loving.

Version of the Gospels (14th century):- And he prechyde

SAYANDE,'-he preached saying,-

Resoundand to the hevennis firmament,— Resounding to the heaven's firmament.

The terminations ENDE, (or and,) and ing coexisted in Anglo Saxon and Old English, as they still do in Dutch and German, the one used for forming what is called the Present Participle, and the other the verbal substantive.

The Participle is not now used as a Substantive. The Substantive is used as a Present Participle.

' — the tender flowris I saw Under dame Naturis mantill lurkynglaw. The small fowlis in flokkis saw 1 fle, To Nature makand greit lamentatioun.'

SIR D. LINDSAY.

It was customary to use the Past Tense itself without any change of termination, instead of what is usually called the Past Participle.

'You might, however, have TOOK a fairer way.'

DRYDEN.

'I do thanking is to God up on the unerrable, or, THAT MAY NOT BE TOLD, gifte of hym.'

ADMISSIBLE, INCORRIGIBLE, FORMIDABLE.

They who first introduced these POTENTIAL PASSIVE ADJECTIVES thought it necessary to explain them to their readers, and accordingly we find in the quotation (I do thankinges) the explanation THAT MAY NOT BE TOLD, accompanying the word UNERRABLE.

The termination Able (or ible) is the Anglo Saxon or Gothic Ebal, Robur, strength.

Our ancient writers were led to adopt these words by their great practical convenience and usefulness, for they could not possibly be translated into English, but by a periphrasis.

All the abbreviations which we enjoy of the POTENTIAL ACTIVE ADJECTIVE, are either borrowed from the Latin, and then they terminate in IVE, as Purgative, &c., or they are borrowed from the Greek, and then they terminate in ic, as Emetic, &c.

From the Latin—Aperitive, passive, sanative, &c. From the Greek—Analytic, Critic, synthetic, &c. &c.

This abbreviation will not serve for corruptions.

' Whiles stood rapt in the wonder of it came Missives From the King, who all hailed me Thane of Cawdor.'

Масвети.

MISSIVE, in this use MISSIBLE, is no longer current in English. We are very scantily provided with words of the Official Passive Adjective.

The following verse from Virgil-

'Infandum, regina, jubes renovare dolorem,' is thus translated by Douglas-

' - Thy desire, lady, is

Renewing of UNTELLYBYL Sorrow I wys.

Untellybyl means—What cannot be uttered, but Virgil says 'Infandum'—That which ought not to be uttered.

This was not the Bishop's fault, but the penury of the language.

REVEREND, that is—Which ought to be revered—and MEMOR-ANDUM—That which ought to be remembered, are words of this sort.

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

The etymology of the words in small capitals is to be traced, and their usage illustrated by quotations from writers, who lived in different centuries.

GEOFFREY CHAUCER.

Geoffrey Chancer was born in the second year of Edward III, A.D. 1328.

Bale says he was a Berkshire man, Pitts would entitle Oxford-shire to his birth; but it is probable that he drew his first breath in the City of London. (See his Test. of Love.)

We may refer to the age of Chancer for the genuine commencement of our Literature, for the earliest diffusion of free inquiry, and for the first great movement of the national mind towards emancipation from spiritual tyranny. We find him frequently (says Campbell) using satire as the moral warfare of indignation and ridicule against turpitude and absurdity, and hence he has been claimed as a Primitive Reformer. His appearance, considering the lapse of our poetry after his time, has been compared to a premature day in an English spring, after which, the gloom of winter returns, and the buds and blossoms which have been called forth by a transient snushine, are nipt by frosts, and scattered by storms.

In the Canterbury Tales it appears to have been the design of Chaucer to compose a company of individuals of different ranks, in order to produce a great variety of distinct character, as may be Fearned from the Prologue which he has prefixed to them.

In order to trace the progress of any language, it is necessary that we should have before us a continued series of authors; that those authors should have been reputable, and that their writings should have been exactly copied. In the English Language we have not an approved author whose writings have been preserved, before the time of Chancer.

In his writings the article SE, SOE, WAT, was laid aside, and THE, our definite article, used in its stead.

"--- to THE highe God."

The declensions of nouns substantive, were reduced from six to one; and instead of a variety of cases in both numbers, they had only a genitive case singular, which was deduced from the nominative, by adding to it es, or s only, if it ended in e feminine; and the same form was used to express the plural number in all its eases, as nom. shour, gen. shoures, plur. shoures—nom. name, gen. names, plur. names.

"Christes secree thinges." "Peters wordes."

Some nouns retained the termination on from the second declension of the Saxous, as oxen, hosen, brethren, eyren, (airs.) A few seem to have been always irregularly declined, as men, wimmen, mice, feet.

The nouns adjective had lost all distinction of gender, case, and number.

"To yield Jesu his propre rent."

The primitive pronouns retained one oblique case in each number, as me, us; the, you; him, hire, hem, or them.

The genitive cases min, thin, oure, youre, were hardly ever distiguishable from pronouns possessive as in Latin, thus,

"Amor MEI,"-" The love I bear to myself."

"Amor Meus,"-The love I bear to another."

In the plural number the genitive case sometimes retained its proper power.

Our ALLER (of all) house,—the house of us all.

Chaucer uses they or he, but never them or their.

The pronouns possessive were in the same state with the adjectives, min, thin, his, hire, oure, youre, hir, or their. The last four of these pronouns were sometimes expressed a little differently,—hires, oures, youres, and hirs, or theirs, as they are still used when the noun to which they belong is understood. Whose book is this? We answer, hers, ours, yours, or theirs, or we declare this book is hers, ours, &e.

The interrogative and relative who, had a genitive and accustive ease, whose and whom, but no variety of number.

The demonstrative prououns this and that, had a plural expression thise and tho, but no variety of ease.

The other words which are often (though improperly) placed in the class of pronouns, were all undeclined like the adjectives, except eyther, neyther, other, which had a genitive case singular, eytheres, neytheres, otheres; other, another, alius, had a genitive case singular, and a plural number, otheres; and aller, a corruption of EALRA, was in use as the genitive plural of all. Self in the Saxon language, was declined like other adjectives, and joined in construction with personal pronouns and substantives. They said Ie sylf, min sylfes, me sylfue, Peter sylf.

Self, like other adjectives was undeclined, when Chancer writes self, selv and selven, those varieties do not denote any distinction of case or number, for he uses indifferently himself and hemselven, hemself and hemselven. Instead of declining the personal pronouns prefixed to self, he constantly uses myself for I-self and me-self; thy-self for thou-self and thee-self; himself and hireself for he-self and she-self; and in the plural number, ourself for we-self and us-self, yourself for ye-self and you-self, and hemself for they-self.

The verb had one mood, the indicative; and two tenses, the present and the past. All the other varieties of mood and time were expressed by auxiliary verbs. "The grammar of a language is one thing, its capacity of expression is another."

In the inflections of their verbs they differed very little from us in the singular number, I love, thou loves, he loveth, but in the plural, some adhered to the old Saxon form, we loveth, ye loveth, they loveth, others adopted what seems to have been the Tentonick, we loven, ye loven, they loven. In the plural of the past tense the later form prevailed, we loveden ye loveden, they loveden.

The second person plural of the imperative terminated in eth. The Saxon infinitive in an had been changed into en—to loven to liven, and they were beginning to drop the n—to love, to live. The present participle began to be terminated in ing, as loving, though the old form in ende or ande, was still in use, as lovende, lovande, and the past participle (as it is sometimes ealled) continued to be formed, as the past tense itself was, in ed, except among the irregular verbs, in which it generally terminated in Ex.

The greatest part of the auxiliary verbs were used and inflicted in the present and past tenses of their indicative and subjunctive moods, and prefixed to the infinitive mood of the verb to which they were auxiliary, I woll loven, I mow or con loven, we shullen or willen loven, we mowen or connen loven. In the past tense, I shulde loven, I wolde, mighte, or moughteloven, we shulden, wolden, mighten, or moughten, or couden loven.

The auxiliary to haven was a complete verb, and prefixed to the participle of the past time, was used to express (what some grammarians are pleased to call) the preterperfect and preterpluperfect tenses.

The auxiliary to ben was a complete verb, and it, prefixed to the same participle with the help of the other auxiliary verb, supplied the place of the whole passive voice.

With regard to the indeclineable parts of speech, they remained either pure Saxon, or abbreviations.

Such was generally the state of the Saxon part of the English Language when Chaucer began to write. Let us now take a brief view of the accession, which it received at different times from Normandy. It appears that the French words imported from time to time, were made subject either immediately or by degrees to the laws of the Saxon idiom. The words imported were chiefly nouns substantitive, adjectives, verbs, and participles. The adverbs derived from French adjectives seem to have been formed from them after they were anglicised, as they have all the Saxon termination lich or ly instead of the French MENT.

Thus rarely, continually, veraily, bravely, which correspond to the French adverds rarement, continuellement, veraiment, bravement.

As to the other indeclinable parts of speech, our language, sufficiently rich in its own stores, had not borrowed any thing from them except an interjection or two. The nouns substantive in the French language had lost their cases long before the time of which we are speaking, such of them as were naturalized seem all to have acquired a genitive case, according to the corrupted Saxon form which has been noticed above, and the French adjectives were reduced to the simple state of the English adjective without case, gender, or number.

The French verbs laid aside their difference of conjugation. Accorder, souffrir, receiver, descendre were regularly changed into accorden, suffren, receiven, desenden. They did not retain any peculiarity of inflection, which could distinguish them from verbs of Saxon growth. The participle in 1NG in some verbs appear to have still preserved its original French form, USANT, SUFFISANT, &c. &c. The past participle adopted almost universally the regular Saxon termination in ed, as accorded, suffred, received, descended, it even frequently assumed the particle GE, or y, which among the Saxons was very generally prefixed to this participle. Hence it may be inferred that at the time of Chaucer—the form of the language was Saxon, but the matter partly French.

VERSIFICATION OF CHAUCER.

The offences against metre in an English verse, must arise either from a superfluity or a deficiency of syllables, or from the accents being improperly placed.

With respect to the first species of irregularity, there are not any superfluities in Chancer's verses that may not be reduced to just measure by the usual practices of modern poets.

A great number of Chaucer's verses labour under an apparent deficiency of a syllable or two; but this verse may be made correct by adopting, in certain words, a prononuciation, which we have reason to believe was used in his time, for instance, the genitive case singular and plural of nonns; the regular termination of the past verse and its participle; e, feminine; the infinitive mood and the plural number of verbs, were all pronounced. Thus, shoures, eroppes, shires, lordes, perced, bathed, wered; hoste, faee, large; slepen, maken, longen, seken.

Chancer appears not to have accented the same syllables that we do, on the contrary, in his French words he most commonly laid his accent according to the French custom, on the last syllable, or the last but one. In French words ending in e femimine, the pronunciation, we know, is still the very reverse of ours. Thus, licour, corages, reson, viage, visage, usage, mancre, laboure, prelat, langage, mariage, contree.

In the same manner he accents the last syllable of the participle in ing,—wedding, coming, living, crying, bremming. The old participle of the present tense in and appears to have been originally accented on that syllable. Thus berand, spryngand, fleand, seand.

He seems to have followed this practice in the middle of verses, whenever it gave a more harmonious flow to his metre. Thus vertue, nature, aventure, honour.

It is surprising that Chaucer without masters, either French, or Italian to guide him, has so seldom failed to place his accents in such a manner as to produce the cadence best suited to the nature of his verse.

GENITIVE CASE, AND PLURAL NUMBER, IN ES, TO BE PRONOUNCED.

PEES, quod our Hoste, for Christes moder dere,
Tell forth thy tale, and spare it not at all.
In shrift, in preching, is my diligence,

IMPERATIVE IN ETH.

Now draweth cutte or that ye farther twinne; He which that hath the shortest shal beginne. Ne studieth nought; lay hand to every man, Anon to drawen every wight began.

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

We may have a Taste of Chaucer's style, in his Description of the sudden stir and fear that happened on the Cock's being carried away by a Fox.

The sely Widow and her Daughters two Herde the Hennes crie and make wo, And at the DorE sterte they anon, And saw the Fox towarde the wood gon, And bare upon his back the Cocke away, And cried out Harow and well away. Aha, the Foxe, and after HEM they ran, And eke with staves many another man, Ran, Coll or Dog, Talbot and eke Garlonde, And Malkin with her distaff in her honde. Ran Cow and Calfe, and eke the very Hogges, For they so sore aferde were of the Dogges, And shouting of men, and of women eke, They ran so, her herte thought to breke. They yellen as fendes do in hell; The Duckes eried as men would them quell.

In at the halle dore al sodenly, Ther came a knight upon a stede of bras, And in his hond a brod mirrour of glass; Upon his thombe he had of gold a ring, And by his side a naked swerd hanging; And up he rideth to the highe hoard, In all the halle ne was ther spoke a word For mervaille of this knight; him to behold Full besily they waiten young and old.

GAVIN DOUGLAS, BISHOP OF DUNKELD.

GAWIN DOUGLAS, Bishop of Dunkeld, was born in the end of 1474, or the beginning of 1475, two years after the birth of James IV.

Sir D. Lindsay, who was contemporary with Bishop Douglas, informs us that 'the Bishop's works are more than five;' Dempster specifies only five; but the Bishop himself alludes to a sixth-

The five of which Dempster gives us a particular list, are Palatium Honoris, Aurea Narrationes, Comedia Sacra, Virgilii Œneis Scoticis rythmis translata, Liber de Rebus Scoticis.

The Palace of Honour which the Bishop wrote when he was about 27 years of age, is an Allegorical Poem, designed to show the vanity of worldly pomp, and the Felicity of Virtue.

Of the Aurea Narrationes, and the Comedia Sacra, we can give no other account than that the former was probably a short Treatise on Heathen Mythology, and the latter an amusing description of great and virtuous characters, taken from Sacred and Profane History.

The Book de Rebus Scoticis, 'A Treatise on Scotish Affairs,' was probably that sent to Polydore, in 1520, or 1521, the year of Gawin Douglas's death.

ANALYSIS OF BISHOP DOUGLAS'S STYLE.

- I. His Orthography is not UNIFORM.
- II. HE, SHE, HIM, HIS, QUHAM, are applied to things inanimate, as,

And lyke as the grete roche crag with ane soun From the top of sum montane tumlyt doun, Quhen that it is oner symte with windis blast, Or with the drumly schouris spate down cast, Or than be lang proces of mony zeris, Lowsing away the erd and away weris, Is made to fal and tombil with all HIS sweeht, Lyke til ane wikkyt hil of huge wecht,

Haldyng HYS farde the discence of the bra, Wyth mony skyp and stend baith to and fra, Quhyl that HE schoutys fer on the plane ground, And all that he ower rekys doys confound, Woddys, heirdis, flokkys, cattal and men, Ouer welterand wyth HYM in the depe glen-

III. Z is used for u or y, when u or y begins a syllable, or is a consonant, (as some term it,) as ZE, ZEAR, for ye, year, and SULZE, cheinzes, for sulye, cheinyes, or as they are now spelt, soil, chains.

The planis eik and SULZE of Celene.

- IV. Y is sometimes omitted for the sake of the verse; as, sa for say, da for day.
- V. Wi is sometimes used instead of ous, as richtwis for right-cous, wrangwis for wrangous.
- VI. U is generally employed for o and oo, and on the contrary, o is frequently used for a, as buke for book, luf for love, tone for tune.
- VII. V and U are used promiseuously. W is used for u, and sometimes u for w, as bewty for beauty, down for down.
- VIII. T is often omitted before ch, as cache for catch. Tch or ch is used for k, as pik for pitch. T is sometimes added to the end of words, as caucht for eatch. D is frequently changed into t and t into d, as standart for standard, boddonm for bottom.
- IX. S and c are often used for each other, as decist for desist, rais for race.
- X. Quh is always used for wh, as, quhyte for white, or hypocritical.
 - ' And his dissimillit slekit wourdes QUHYTE.'
- XI. Words which now have n after g, have it befor g, as, ring for reign.
- XII. L is sometimes used where it is now omitted, and omitted where it is now used, as awalk, awake, fou for full.
 - XIII. K or kk is often put for et, as, contrakk for contract.
- XIV. I is generally printed as i. I and y are used promiscuously for each other, and i is often used for e and u, as invy for envy, sindry for sundry.
- XV. H after s is often omitted or turned into another s, as bus for bush, wissit for wished.

XVI. F is frequently used for v, and v for f, as luf for love, wiffis for wives, live for life. V is generally employed instead of f for the sake of verse.

XVII. E is frequently found when we now use ee, ea, ac, eo, y or ie, and before u or w where it is not now used, as, kene for keen, tre for tree, pece for peace, sustene for sustain, bounte for bounty, roule for rule. Ei is sometimes used for ea, as, reik for reach.

XVIII. D, in imitation of the French is sometimes omitted, as, plege fer pledge, avice for advice. D is found for th, and th for d, as fader for father, tythings for tidings. De initial is used where we do not now use it, and vice versa, as defaid for faded, gre for degree.

XIX. C is put between s and h, before h when we now use g, generally omitted before k, and sometimes turned into k, as, schort for short, right for right, nek for neck, skattir for scatter.

XX. A letter is added sometimes to the end of a word, or near it, sometimes to the beginning of it, and sometimes taken away, sermond for sermon, adoun for down, armony for harmony.

XXI. It denotes the Participle of the Perfect Tense, the third person singular of verbs, and ed. Ith is put for eth.

His feris al RASIT the elamour hie. And followand their chiftane, he and he.

XXII. Is is the sign of the plaral number, of the genitive singular, and the second person singular of verbs.

XXIII. Two words now separated are joined into one, words now joined were then separated, and sometimes joined, and sometimes separated, as tocum for to come, with all for withal, over flowis for overflowes, perordour for per ordour.

XXIV. To is prefixed to verbs and participles, as, to lame, for lamed, to brists for bursts, to quaking for quake.

The dere so dedelie woundit, and to LAME Unto his kynd ressett gan fleing hame.

To before all signifies altogether, as, all to schaik, that is, altogether shaken.

XXV. Many words now formed from the supine of Latin verbs were formed from their present tense, as expreme for express, propone for propose, diffounded for diffused.

XXVI. The last syllable is often changed for the sake of the verse, as saw for save.

On horsbak in this Tarchone baldly draw, Wilful his pepil to support and SAW.

XXVII. Two words of the same sound and number of syllables are made to rhyme with each other, provided their signification be different, as kynd with kynd.

Or than sum goddest of thyr Nymphy is KYND Maistres of woddis, beis to us happy and KYND.

XXVIII. Preterites not now used were employed, as, beak, for did bake, lap, for did leap, begoude, for begin.

Ed is generally admitted after verbs or adjectives, derived from Latin participles, in tus, as, separate for separated, predestinate for predestinated.

XXIX. In the numbers and persons of verbs, the terminations are often used promiseuously, IS is often used in the second person, either singular or plural, of the imperative, as, heris, herkis, hear you, hark.

XXX. Participles are used as verbs, and verbs as Participles, for the sake of the verse, as walkyn, for walks, occupyit for occupy, blaw for blawin, diserf for deserving or desert,

'O lord, how grete brute, noyis and soune, Of confluence that WALKIN him about. We wretchit Troianis, with the windis BLAW Throw strang stremis, and mony divers se', According thy DISERF in all degre'.

The last is an apocope, the first two are examples of Paragoge.

XXXI. The plural of nouns is frequently used for the singular and vice versa.

XXXII. Two negatives deny more strongly.

My vowis NOR my prayeris grete and smal, War NOT accept to nane of Goddis all!

XXXIII. Words, which are now superfluous; are used for the sake of the verse, and other reasons, as for before to and till; do, gan and can before verbs; he, him and the before proper names.

XXXIV. Several words are omitted or understood, as, who, that, which; after, of, as before soon as; do, be, have, is, are, the, I, and particles of the same description.

' Quham the Troyanis so awfull felt in armes, And dred sa oft his furour, wrocht thaym harmes.'

XL. The accent generally falls upon the same syllables except on the last syllable of the verse, the number of syllables in the verses are unequal, but this inequality may in a great measure be accounted for by contractions or elisions, and discress or divisions of syllables. Rutuliane must be scanned, thus,

Doun bet ane Rut'l'ane hecht Emathio; and brane, thus,

'Quhil blude and bra-ene all togiddir mixt.'

Huge is often of two syllables, as,

' Quhilk was sa HUGE, bot to his estate.'

Is at the end of words sometimes makes a separate syllable, sometimes not, as,

'The BATTELLIS and the man I will discribe, Fra Taovis bounds first that fugitiue, By fate to Italie come.'

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

The words in SMALL CAPITALS are to be referred to the rules given. The derivation of all the words may be traced by reference to SAXON DERIVATIVES.

'Or for to se thaym machit on the grene, Derene the bargane wyth thare wappinnis kene.'

EDMUND SPENSER.

Spenser was born in London, and educated at Pembroke Hall, in Cambridge.

He was created Poet Laureat to Queen Elizabeth, but for some time, says Mr. Upton, he wore a barren laurel, and possessed only the place without the pension.

It is said the Queen, upon his presenting some poems to her, ordered him a gratuity of a hundred pounds; but that the Lord Treasurer objecting to it, said, with seorn of the poet, "What! all this for a song?" The Queen replied, "Then give him what is reason." Spenser waited for some time, but had the mortification to find himself disappointed of the Queen's intended bounty. Upon this he took a proper opportunity to present a paper to Queen Elizabeth, in the manner of a petition, in which he reminded her of the orders she had given, in the following lines:—

I was promis'd on a time
To have reason for my rhime;
From that time unto this season,
I have receiv'd nor rhime nor reason.

This paper produced the desired effect, and the Queen, not without reproving the Treasurer, immediately directed the payment of the hundred pounds she had first ordered.

Chancer and Spenser are the two ancient English poets, who seem, as a writer observes, to have taken deep root, like old British oaks, and to flourish in defiance of all the injuries of time and weather. These two geniuses were of a very different kind.—Chancer excelled in his characters, Spenser in his descriptions. The latter has been the father of more English poets than any other of our writers, because his embellishments of description, the most striking part of poetry, are rich and lavish beyond comparison.

It is said that Cowley first eaught his flame by reading Spenser; Milton owned him for his original; Dryden studied and commended him; Gray habitually read him when he wished to frame his thoughts for composition, and there are few eminent poets in the language who have not been essentially indebted to him.

> 'Hither, as to their fountain, other stars Repair, and in their urns draw golden light.'

His Fairy Queen is more known and celebrated than any of his other writings.

It is an Allegory, (continued Metaphor,) Fable, or Story, in which, under imaginary persons or things, is shadowed some real action or instructive moral. In some instances the characters in the 'Fairy Queen' have a threefold allusion.

Gloriana is at once an emblem of true glory, an Empress of Fairy-land, and her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth. Envy is a personified passion, and also a witch, and, with no very charitable insinuation, a type of the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots. The Knight in dangerous distress is Henry IV. of France—and the Knight of Magnificence, Prince Arthur—an ancient British hero, is the bulwark of the Protestant faith in the Netherlands.

Upton, in the preface to his edition of the Fairy Queen, observes that the fable has a beginning, a middle, and an end. The beginning is, the British Prince saw in a vision the Fairy Queen, and fell in love with her; the middle, his search after her, with the adventures that he underwent; the end, his finding whom he sought.

It is the gradual advance of our language into modern polish and succintness that has now to be pointed out. In Spenser we meet with but few of the Anglo-Saxon idioms which are so common in Chaucer.

"Spenser," says Campbell, "threw the soul of harmony into our verse, and made it more warmly, tenderly, and magnificently descriptive than ever it was before, or, with a few exceptions, than it has ever been since. We shall no where find more airy and expansive images of visionary things, a sweeter tone of sentiment, or a finer flush in the colours of language, than in this Rubens of English poetry. His expression, though antiquated, is beautiful in its antiquity, and like the moss and ivy on some majestic building, covers the fabric of his language with romantic and venerable associations."

With regard to the time of his death, the inscription on his monument crected by Robert Devereux, informs us

Heare lyes (expecting the second comminge of our Saviour Christ Jesus) the body of Edmund Spenser, the prince of poets in his tyme; whose divine spirit needs noe other witness, than the works which he left behind him. He was borne in London in the year 1510, and died in the yeare 1596.

His stanza consists of nine verses of the heroic kind, in which the 1st and 3d, the 2d 4th, 5th, and 7th, the 6th, Sth, and 9th, rliyme to one another, as in the following instance:-

Enforst to seeke some covert nigh at HAND,
A shadie grove not farr away they SPIDE,
That promist ayde the tempest to withSTAND,
Whose loftic trees, yelad with summers PRIDE,
Did spred so broad that heavens light did HIDE,
Not perceable with power of any STARR;
And all within were pathes and alleies WIDE,
With footing worne, and leading inward FARRE,
Faire harbour that them seems, so in they entred ARRE.

1st and 3d-hand-withstand.

2d, 4th, 5th, and 7th—spide—pride—hide—wide. 6th, 8th, and 9th—starr—farre—arre.

In order to prevent so many jingling terminations in one Stanza, he sometimes introduces hemistics, thus

And after them herself eke with her went To seke the fugitive (completed in the second edition) both farre and nere.

He also makes two words, though spelt the same, yet if of different significations, to rhyme to each other.

Phoebus, which is the sun HOTE, That shineth upon earth HOTE.

And comming where the knight in slumber LAY, Then seemed him his lady by him LAY.

B. I., C. I., ST. 47.

Yet is Cleopolis for earthly FAME— The fairest peece— That covet in the immortal booke of FAME. But one of you, al be hym lothe or LEFE, He must go pipin in an ivie LEFE.

He even alters, adds, and takes away a letter.

But temperance, said he, with golden squire, (square)

Betwixt them both can measure out a meane, Neither to meet in pleasures who desire.

в. 1., с. 1., гт. 58.

Some mouth'd like greedy ostryges, some FASTE (faced) Like loathly toades, some fashioned in the waste Like swine.

B. II., C. I., ST. 58.

The Poet seems to have spelt the endings alike, though the printer does not always observe it.

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

The STANZA, and the PECULARITY of the Words in SMALL CAPITALS, are to be explained. The Derivation of the Words may be traced.

And forth they passe, with pleasure forward led Joying to heare the birdies sweet harmony, Which therein shrouded from the tempest DRED, Seemd in their song to seorn the cruell sky. Much can they praise the trees so straight and MY, The sayling pine, the cedar proud and tall, The vine-propp elme, the poplar never dry, The builder oake, sole king of forrests all, The aspine, good for staves, the cypresse funerall.

Upon the top of all his loftic erest
A bounch of heares discolour'd diversly,
With sprincled pearle and gold full richly drest,
Did shake, and seemed to daunce for jollity;
Like to an almond tree ymounted HYE
On top of greene Selinis all alone,
With blossoms brave bedeeked daintily,
Whose tender looks do tremble every one,
At everie little breath that under heaven is blown.

Exceeding shone, like Phoebus fayrest childe,
That did presume his fathers fyrie wayne,
And flaming mouthes of steedes unwonted wilde,
Through highest heaven with weaker hand to RAYNE,
Proud of such glory and advancement vayne,
While flashing beames do daze his feeble exen,
He leaves the welkin way most beaten playne,
And, wrapt with whirling wheeles, inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burne, but fayrely for to shyne.

B. 1., C. IV., ST. IX.

Now when the rosy-fingred morning faire,
Weary of aged Tithones saffron bed,
Had spread her purple robe through deawy aire,
And the high hills Titan discovered,
The royall virgin shooke off drousyhed,
And rising forth out of her baser bowre,
Lookt for her knight, who far away was fled,
And for her dwarfe, that wont to wait each HOURE;
Then gan she wail and weepe to see that woeful STOWRE.

Though Spencer's style is not now Reputable, National, and Present, yet we have reason to infer that it was once deemed Elegant, for it is said by his contemporaries that to Purity and Perspicuity, he added all the graces of Figure and Harmony. His Metaphors, both Elevating and Personifying, are generally suitable, well chosen, and striking. He seldom crowds them on the same object, pursues them too far, or blends Metaphorical and Plain language; and if his Metaphors are occasionally mixed, it is because they are agreeable to nature, and therefore suitably suggested. Some of his Personifications are very bold; inanimate objects not only live, but they act and evince emotion; thus,

'Upon the top of all his loftie crest,
A BOUNCH of HEARES discolourd diversly,
With sprinkled pearle and gold full richly drest,
Did shake, and seemed to DAUNCE for JOLLITY.

The objects from which he drew his comparisons, were accommodated to the nature of his subject, and must have been known to most of his readers.

The resemblance direct or analogous in his Similes, is seldom either too striking or too remote.

"Among the Allegories in Canto X., it is impossible not to distinguish that venerable figure of contemplation in his hermitage on the top of a hill, represented as an old man almost wasted away in study,"

With snowy lockes adowne his shoulders shed, As hoary frost with spangles doth attire The massy braunches of an oke halfe DED.

The Resemblance, implied or expressed in the following figures (of speech,) is to be traced, and reasons are to be assigned for their natural and harmonising suggestion.

The light which is let into the house of Riches, is Such as a lamp, whose LIFE doth FADE AWAY;
Or as the moon, CLOATHED with cloudy night.

A giant's fall is ————; as an aged tree, Whose HART-STRINGS with KEENE steele nigh HEWEN be; The mightie trunck, half rent with RAGGED RIFT, Doth roll adowne the rocks, and fall with fearefull drift.

The following verses are a beautiful memorial of the friendship which Spenser contracted with Sir Walter Raleigh, described under the name of the Shepherd of the Ocean:

— I sate, as was my trade, Under the roor of Mole, that mountain hore, Keeping my sheep amongst the cooly shade Of the green alders, by the Mulla's shore; Then a strange shepherd chanc'd to find me out, Whither allured with my pipe's delight, - Whose pleasing sound yshrilled far about, Or thither led by chance, I know not right, Whom, when I asked from what place he came, And how he hight? himself he did ycleep The Shepherd of the Ocean by name, And said he came far from the main-sea deep. He sitting me beside, in that same shade Provoked me to play some pleasant fit, And when he heard the musicke that I made, He found himself full greatly pleas'd at it. Yet, aemuling my pipe, he took in hond My pipe, before that aemuled of many, And plaid thereon, for well that skill he con'd, Himself as skilful in that art as any.

The last Canto of the Second Book, being designed to show the trial of the virtue of Temperance, abounds with the most pleasurable ideas, which the fancy of the poet could suggest. Spenser has two stanzas descriptive of a garden and fountain. In the latter stanza, which is an imitation of Tasso, "he seems to make the music he describes."

Eftsoones they heard a most melodious sound Of all that more delight a daintie eare, Such as at once might not on living ground, Save in this paradise, be heard elsewhere; Right hard it was for wight which did it heare To read what manner musicke that mote bee, For all that pleasing is to living eare Was there consorted in one harmonee; Birdes, voices, instruments, windes, waters, all agree;

The joyous birdes, shrouded in chearfull shade,
Their notes unto the voice attempred sweet;
Th' angelicall soft trembling voyces made
To th' instruments of divine respondence meet;
The silver-sounded instruments did meet
With the base murmure of the water's fall;
The water's fall, with difference discreet,
Now soft, now loud, unto the wind did call;
The gentle warbling wind low answered to all.

B. II., C. VIII., ST. LVIII.

It is now recommended to the Student to explain the pecularities of the style, and trace the Derivation of the words found in the Fraieres Tale (of the Canterbury Tales,) and the last Canto of the Second Book of the Fairy Queen.
